Oh, My!

Editor:

There were some remarks that are common and were repeated in "Lion Stories" (June 26) that are simply no longer true since the hunting ban was implemented.

One was that mountain lions avoid people. In fact the Wildlife spokesman Hughan "suspects" mountain lions avoid areas where people live. Well they don't of course — why they are rarely seen is because they avoid being seen. I think people would be creeped out by the number of times they are being watched by lions when they have no idea the lion is there. As was Ms. Way when the lion revealed itself by snatching a cat.

And then there is that old chestnut about most attacks being carried out by sick, old or inexperienced lions as if that is a comfort to someone whose skull is being crunched — "at least he really didn't mean it personally."

I agree that mountain lions don't seem to travel up roads but they certainly cross them. That was the way I saw my first mountain lion up close. He crossed the road in front of my car. But they do use deer trails routinely. If you see a tunnel in the brush that deer have used, then a mountain lion probably has that marked in its mind as a place to ambush dinner.

I do agree with Ms. Crandell that dogs do more damage to livestock but that is a fact changing gradually with the increase in mountain lion population causing much more contact with livestock.

Concrete concerns

How a noticing error sent Willow Creek in a tizzy

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

The letters paint a dire picture, with talk of birth defects, heart attacks and premature death. They warn of an industrial operation that will spew mercury, hydrocarbons and other toxics into the air just a stone's throw from a local elementary school and a medical clinic, and just a couple hundred yards from the banks of the Trinity River, which multiple communities depend on for food, water and recreation. "Our community is appalled that a company would come to our area and knowingly pollute our air, ground and water," reads one letter signed by more than a dozen Willow Creek residents.

But the company is not some Johnny-come-lately, it's Eureka-based Mercer-Fraser, which has operated a gravel yard nestled in a curve of the Trinity River for five decades. Is this locally owned company really knowingly doing something that's going to belch pollution and toxics? The short answer is no.

A great deal of the animosity and fear surrounding Mercer-Fraser's proposal to construct a concrete batch plant on its existing industrial site off State Route 96 is the result of an error by the North Coast Unified Air Quality Management District, which is currently mulling the company's permit application. When the district noticed the application, Permit Engineer Winslow Condon described the project as a "Portland cement manufacturing plant," which understandably raised some hackles.

Portland cement manufacturing plants take crushed raw limestone mixed with some other ingredients and heat it in a rotating kiln to astronomical temperatures, usually using diesel burners. It's a nasty process, one that results in huge releases of caustic dust and dioxin, as well as CO<sub>2</sub> and sulfur dioxide emissions. As a consequence, manufacturing facilities are intensely monitored by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. But this is not what Mercer-Fraser is looking to do in Willow Creek. Rather, the company is seeking permits to construct a concrete batch plant to operate alongside its asphalt batch and aggregate processing plants.

An operating concrete batch plant essentially does the same thing you would do when mixing concrete in a wheelbarrow, but on a much larger scale. Mercer-Fraser's plant would be used to fill cement trucks with concrete, using large electrically powered machinery to mix the cement with aggregate rock in an elevated tower, known as a "batcher," where it is weighed and dropped into a cement mixer truck waiting below and mixed with water to make concrete. Condon said the batcher will be equipped with a filter known as a "dust collector." Condon said these dust collectors, also known as "bag houses," are very efficient, and generally trap 99 percent of particulate matter up to 10 micrometers in size. "It's a highly efficient emissions control device," Condon said, adding that the accompanying cement storage silo and bin would also be outfitted with them.

Overall, Condon said, he expects emissions from the proposed batch plant will be very low. "The potential amount of pollution calculated to come from that concrete batch plant is so minimal that it came well below all of our thresholds to protect public health," he said. "On the scale of things, it's really quite small." Or, in the words of Mercer-Fraser owner Justin Zabel, "It's fairly low-key."

So, if that's true, why all the fuss? Was it simply over a noticing error? Humboldt County Planning Commissioner Steve Paine, who headed the Willow Creek Community Services District for 15 years before retiring in October and probably knows the community as well as anyone, said the issue is a bit more complicated than that. Making clear he's yet to make up his mind on Mercer-Fraser's proposal, Paine said he thinks there's already a "long-standing prejudice in this area that we have an asphalt batch plant across from the school." (Calls placed to Trinity Valley Elementary School seeking comment for this story were not returned). Some of that, Paine said, stems back a decade or two to when Mercer-Fraser, "seemingly overnight," expanded its property along the Trinity.

"There are people that feel like things are sometimes done behind people's backs and secretly," Paine said.

But even when things are done in open view, Paine said Willow Creekers can view the world through a skeptical lens, pointing to a fierce debate over fluoridating the town's water supply some years back that he says was dominated by misinformation and "really radical reports on all the potential damage."

For his part, Zabel said Mercer-Fraser is trying to be a good neighbor, like it always has. He pointed to the road down to Big Rock, one of the area's most popular swimming holes. The road runs through the company's property, Zabel said, and was made possible after Mercer-Fraser gave the county a right of way and then voluntarily paved the road. In this case, Zabel said Mercer-Fraser could have opted to locate the concrete batch plant further back on its sprawling property to sidestep public noticing requirements. But, he said the company didn't feel any need to hide what it's doing, and recognized that having all its operations close together would reduce its footprint and lessen dust, noise and other impacts.

Moving forward, Condon said the air quality management district has asked Mercer-Fraser to turn over some California Environmental Quality Act documents by Oct. 5 so it can make a determination on the company's application. However, Condon stressed that the sole criteria for the district's decision would be whether the project is compliant with air quality laws.

If approved, Zabel said the new concrete batcher will supply some private contractors out of the area, but mostly go to county and Caltrans road crews. Currently, Mercer-Fraser supplies such crews from its plant in Fortuna, leaving cement mixer trucks driving back and forth on State Route 299. "From an environmental standpoint, it's a lot easier to batch out of Willow Creek," Zabel said. ●

County Advances Tax Hike

There's a tax measure coming to a ballot near you. In fact, if you live in a city, you're likely to see a couple of them.

The Humboldt County Board of Supervisors voted unanimously July 8 to move forward with putting a county-wide sales tax before voters in November, though there's still some question as to whether the board will opt for a .5 percent or a .75 percent levy.

County Administrative Officer Philip Smith-Hanes told the board that polling commissioned by the county found 63 percent of probable voters said they would likely vote in favor of such a measure and that the number didn't vary much when asking voters about a tax of .25 percent, .5 percent or .75 percent. Smith-Hanes said a .25 percent tax is projected to bring in about $3 million in additional revenue for the cash-strapped county, while a .75 percent sales tax would generate a projected $9 million.

Smith-Hanes noted that the county tax will not be the only one on November ballots, as Fortuna is proposing a 1 percent sales tax hike, Blue Lake is putting a utility users tax on the ballot, Eureka is pushing to renew its .5 percent transaction and use tax, and Rio Dell is also mulling putting forward a revenue-generating measure.

The board's discussion Tuesday made clear that it is moving forward with gnashed teeth. Board Chair and 1st District Supervisor Rex Bohn at one point proclaimed that he hates both taxes and government but that he appreciates governmental services, which are in dire need of additional revenue. Third District Supervisor Mark Lovelace countered that he likes government and doesn't resent taxes any more than he does paying for something at the store. Taxes, Lovelace said, are simply a payment for services.

Eureka Won't Release Controversial Panos Memo

After conferring with an outside attorney, the city of Eureka has denied a Journal request seeking the release of a controversial memo penned by former City Manager Bill Panos on the day he left his employment with the city.

The Oct. 4 memo — or, more specifically, the controversy surrounding it — was thrust into public light by a declaration former Eureka City Councilman Lance Madsen penned on his deathbed, alleging that City Attorney Cyndy Day-Wilson improperly distributed Panos' memo to City Hall employees and then lied about having done so.

In the declaration and an accompanying investigative report, Madsen said Panos sent the memo to city council members, making clear it was confidential and contained personnel information. Nonetheless, Madsen said city employees quickly became aware of the memo, which Panos dubbed a "reorganization blueprint" but city attorneys reportedly began referring to as "Panos' hit list" because it was sharply critical of some city department heads.

Clowns Prefer the Journal

Dell' Arte International recently awarded its 2014 Prize of Hope to Clowns Without Borders, setting off a day of clowning around and red-nosed hijinks. Blue Lake's prestigious performing arts school hands out the annual Prize of Hope to the person or theatre who has worked "for the hope of humankind; daringly, lovingly, vulgarly, seriously, poetically ... with sparkling energy against conventional thinking, which is the greatest threat to our culture."

Clowns Without Borders is a group of clowns and performing artists that travel to war zones, areas of natural disaster and other places in crisis to perform shows that promote laughter and joy.

Father, Son Killed in Crash

A 74-year-old man and his 53-year-old son were killed the night of July 3 in a suspected DUI crash on Fortuna's Drake Hill Road, the California Highway Patrol reported.

According to the CHP, Jacky Martin, 53, of San Francisco, was driving a 2004 Mini Cooper southbound on Ronald Avenue toward Drake Hill Road with his father, Thomas Martin, 74, of Fortuna, in the passenger seat. Jacky Martin was driving under the influence of alcohol, according to CHP, and failed to stop at the intersection of Drake Hill Road before colliding with a dirt embankment south of the intersection, causing the vehicle to overturn.

Neither Jacky Martin nor his father were wearing their seat belts, according to CHP. Jacky Martin was declared dead at the scene and his father was transported to Redwood Memorial Hospital, where he died early Friday morning.

The accident was the second suspected DUI fatality at the intersection in the last seven months. In December, Michael Horn was allegedly driving drunk, heading southbound on Ronald Avenue, when he blew through the same stop sign, his 2002 Subaru colliding head-on with the same embankment on the south side of Drake Hill Road, killing one of Horn's passengers and seriously injuring two others.

More Postal Consolidation

Eureka's mail processing center is once again on the chopping block. The United States Postal Service put forward a proposal to consolidate Eureka's processing facility into one in Medford, Ore., which would cause a loss of local jobs and delay incoming and outgoing mail service for the North Coast. Congressman Jared Huffman and Rep. Mike Thompson (D-St. Helena) both sent a letter opposing the move to the postmaster general.

"It is our understanding that this decision will result in the loss of hundreds of postal staff positions, and our constituents will face a two- to three-day service standard for First-Class Mail, instead of one to three days," Huffman and Thompson wrote. "This change would be especially difficult for seniors, veterans, and our rural communities, who rely on timely delivery of prescriptions and other postal services."

THE WEEK IN WEED

Free Pot, Free Pot Research!

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

In a move sure to surprise no Rush listeners, the Berkeley City Council voted unanimously earlier this month to give city residents free pot.

The granola-friendly East Bay burb, which has been a den of radical political leanings since the 1960s, couldn't wait to make it even easier for its bobble-headed population of hippies, freegans and hammock-revolutionaries to get blazed; and in deciding to approve yet another dispensary permit (the fourth in city limits) also wrote into law that low-income folks must be given free dope.

Abandoning all camouflage of its wholehearted embrace of Marxism, leaders of the elite liberal gulag will require that dispensaries (private sector businesses!) must give away no less than 2 percent of the gross weight sold, according to the East Bay Express. In the article, David Downs writes that freedom fighter (and United States attorney) Melinda Haag continues to battle with a prominent Berkeley dispensary and others around the Bay Area, having successfully closed 11 in San Francisco. A gleaming beacon of reason and free market capitalism, San Jose, is home to more than 80 pot shops, according to the Express.

— Speaking of Marks-ism: Remember that Pot PAC we wrote about a few weeks ago? The group gained a shrewd ally in its quest to mold meaningful medical marijuana regulations out of the amorphous slop that's been in place since Proposition 215 passed. Richard Marks — local political whiz (he most recently worked on 4th District Supe Virginia Bass' successful re-election bid), Harbor District commissioner, North Coast Rail Authority director, Humboldt Domestic Violence Services treasurer, Mad River Softball Association president, blogger and former union organizer — has been hired as Humboldt County's community organizer and political consultant for California Cannabis Voice.

The organization, which said in a press release that a Senate bill proposing regulations of the medical marijuana industry "will not protect the rural cannabis community," has gained a flurry of support in the northern half of the state. At a June meeting in Mendocino County, the PAC's website proclaims, a supporter called upon the audience to donate to the committee. "Will you give a pound to the cause?" he reportedly asked the crowd. "We'll either take your money or we'll take a pound. Because if we can't sell that pound, we don't belong here."

— By the time you're reading this, Washington state's smoky exhalations will be perfectly legit, if hard to come by. The state began issuing pot-selling permits Monday, with a 24-hour waiting period following approval, but some folks are worried that the stash won't meet the demand. Reuters reported widespread concerns that the state's retail markets would run out within hours of opening for sale, "largely because of limited harvests by licensed growers and processors, or because they failed to clear regulatory hurdles to get their product to market."

Meanwhile, reports the San Jose Mercury News, all is groovy in Colorado, which beat Washington to the retail pot game by six months. Polls in the state have shown increasing support for cannabis legalization, with one in April that finds 61 percent of residents believe legalization has been good for the state or not changed it.

— A researcher who spent years securing federal approval to test the effects of marijuana on veterans suffering PTSD lost her job with the University of Arizona in a move that she says was "political retaliation" for her interest in pot. If true, it's a boneheaded blow both to the scientific process that academic institutions must promote and to some of the nation's most vulnerable people who could benefit from the research.

Suzanne Sisley's study was approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in 2011 and by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services earlier this year, according to USA Today, and would have received Drug Enforcement Agency approval as long as her research was going to be conducted through a university. Her termination, effective in September, jeopardizes that approval, and potentially the entire study. Maybe UC Berkeley will take her? ●

Point of No Return?

With the Green Rush and the drought colliding this summer, is it too late to save Humboldt's watersheds?

By Thadeus Greenson

As the golden state turns brown, there's a debate raging, pitting fishermen against ranchers, farmers against environmental groups and Sacramento bureaucrats against rural landowners throughout the state. With a state snowpack that's just a fraction of normal levels, the magnitude of our current drought is finally hitting home. Meanwhile, in Humboldt County, known for its towering redwoods, gushing rivers and lush pastures, a perfect storm is hitting shore.

It's July 2 and about 18 officials are sitting in a meeting with North Coast Congressman Jared Huffman in the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office Conference Room. The officials — cops, biologists, politicians and U.S. Forest Service employees — are talking about the proliferation of marijuana grows throughout Humboldt County and beyond, and many are expressing frustration about how little they can do in the face of the epidemic.

In many ways, the conversation mirrors one held about a year ago with most of the same stakeholders. Law enforcement officials bemoan the lack of resources they say leaves them battling a proverbial firestorm with a garden hose. Sheriff Mike Downey points out that in 2013, his office identified more than 4,000 large-scale outdoor marijuana grows in the county but only had the resources to eradicate 92 of them. Wildlife biologist Mourad Gabriel says he and partners are left to pull together grant monies to try to clean up the busted grows, explaining how they used seven grants last year to clean up just five sites. Meanwhile, Gabriel says, mortality rates in threatened Pacific fisher populations are increasing as the weasel-like animals are being poisoned by rodenticides left behind by growers. "These trends are not dissipating," he says. "They're accelerating."

But, this year, there's a different tone and an old concern made freshly urgent. The group is meeting as the State Water Resources Control Board is sending notices to 17 water rights holders — including ranchers, cities and community services districts — along the Eel River, and seven more along the Van Duzen, notifying them their water rights are being suspended. Meanwhile, unpermitted water diversions to irrigate pot gardens are unchecked throughout the county.

"How outrageous is it that the city of Rio Dell is getting a curtailment order while you have people all through this area stealing water from campgrounds, streams, schools and facilities," Huffman asks. Downey chimes in: "I'm super concerned about the drought," he says. "This year could be catastrophic."

And even a glance at the data tells us Downey could be right. Right now, in early July, flows on the Van Duzen River near Bridgeville are lower than they have ever been, according to the United States Geological Survey. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Association's station on Woodley Island, meanwhile, just recorded the third driest water year on record for Eureka. Meanwhile, anecdotal evidence indicates there are likely more growers in the hills this year and that many are planting larger gardens, looking for big paydays as the industry crumbles beneath them, with retail marijuana prices plummeting and the state bracing for legalization.

Humboldt County 1st District Supervisor Rex Bohn, a former raw minerals locator for FoxFarm Soil and Fertilizer Co., says fertilizer sales are up 20 percent in the county. "The hills are blown out this year."

tions. But in 2009, Bauer was called to help law enforcement officials assess the damage done by a large grow site where outlaw farmers had used a backhoe to carve a road into a hillside. It was at that site that Bauer said he noticed a large-scale water diversion, with pumps pulling water from a stream up the hillside to a marijuana garden, for the first time.

"Then, in 2010, we started seeing diversions everywhere," Bauer said. After a particularly wet winter, Bauer said he was monitoring flows on the Van Duzen River the following summer, in 2011, and was shocked to see flows dive below average levels in July and August. "I thought, 'Why the hell would they do that?'" When Google released its new and improved satellite imagery in 2012, Bauer and the folks at Fish and Wildlife decided to map some watersheds. They found clusters of hundreds of marijuana gardens in the four watersheds surveyed, each with plant counts in the tens of thousands.

They did some admittedly crude math, based on the Humboldt Grower's Association's estimate that mature plants each use up to 6 gallons of water per day. The Fish and Wildlife scientists found that during seven-day low flows — or the seven days of the year when stream flows are at their lowest, usually in mid-September — gardens in three of the four watersheds examined could consume more than 100 percent of the available water. "In a lot of these watersheds, nobody has a permitted diversion," Bauer said.

Bauer and Fish and Wildlife caught a lot of flak from growers for their survey. Some say the 6-gallon-a-day figure is a gross overestimation, and others point out that the survey assumes no growers are utilizing best practices and diverting water during wet, winter months to store and use when stream flows dwindle in the summer. Bauer conceded those points may be true, but is quick to point out that Fish and Wildlife personnel saw first-hand impacts in the summer of 2013. "What we found last year is creeks going dry," he said. And that was after a water year in which the region got about 75 percent of its annual rain fall. In this past year, in the throes of drought, the parched region recorded just more than 50 percent of its 30-year average rainfall. "It's the perfect storm," Bauer said.

And Bauer is fairly convinced that if he were to conduct the survey over again, he'd only find more gardens with more plants. "Every grow site we went to in 2013 was either new, or had gotten bigger [than the year before],” he said, adding that this year he’s hearing cultivation along State Route 36 is beyond anything residents out there have seen. “Everyone said, ‘I thought 2013 was the peak. I can’t believe it, but this year it’s even bigger.’ That’s the story everywhere. ... It’s just gotten so big.”

Law enforcement agrees. Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office Lt. Wayne Hanson recently told the Times-Standard he estimates there are 5,000 large-scale outdoor marijuana gardens in the county this year, which would represent a 25-percent increase from what the agency reported identifying last year. During the meeting with Huffman, Mike Minton, acting forest supervisor for Six Rivers National Forest, said his agency is seeing a big increase in the amount of commercial traffic on forest service roads, especially “huge increases in the volume of commercial water trucks.”

Bauer said — in July — he’s already getting calls and emails weekly from folks reporting that their streams have dried up. “I can’t imagine what August is going to look like,” he said.

If there was one concern Yurok Tribe Vice Chair Sue Masten urgently wanted to convey to Huffman at the recent meeting, it was that water is in short supply around the Klamath River. She said tribal members living on ranches in the upper basin depend on creeks for their water, but the creeks are going dry, she said, due to an explosion of grows in the area. “We are extremely concerned over these water diversions,” she said. The problem has gotten so severe, Masten said, that the tribe considered trucking water in for its members. “It was too expensive,” she said.

But it looks like some growers are turning to trucking water in to irrigate their crops. J&T Logging has an ad posted on Craigslist offering to truck water — 3,000 gallons at a time purchased at a bulk rate from the Humboldt Community Services District — anywhere in the tri-county area. The company’s water truck is a new addition this year, purchased after owner Tamara Daniels saw the drought coming. During the recent meeting with Huffman, Bohn informed the congressman’s field rep that 31 water trucks were built in the county this year, causing Huffman to muse: “The sophistication of this enterprise is astounding.”

Despite J&T Logging’s urgings on Craig-

slist to “get your water legally!” many fear growers will turn to theft rather than watch their crops wither. Last year, thousands of gallons of water were stolen from fire hydrants in the Myers Flat area, from spigots in Weott and from a storage tank at Bridgeville Elementary School. Minton told Huffman his department is constantly worried about theft, adding that his engineering department has had to get creative to make sure water supplies to forest campsites, offices and facilities are protected. Hoopa Wildlife Biologist Mark Higley said he’s concerned some water trucks may be filling up directly from local rivers.

Sitting behind his desk at the Fish and Wildlife offices on Second Street in Eureka, Bauer stressed that he simply wants folks to come into compliance and get their water diversions permitted. “We do a lot of outreach because we want people to work with us,” he said. “We don’t care what they’re growing, we want people to come in and get permits and conserve and protect our public trust waterways.” But despite the agency’s best efforts, Bauer said water diversion permit applications have remained completely stagnant. “I get a few calls a month asking questions but I never see those people come in,” he said.

Hollie Hall, who has a Ph.D. in the adaptive management of watersheds and recently started a consulting business, said there are lots of reasons folks in rural Humboldt County don’t want to go through the process. “There are people who find becoming compliant a complete invasion of privacy,” she said. “What I’ve noticed is that every step of the way, the paperwork and the process leaves the door open for someone to come onto your land.” But Hall said some folks who’ve never had the proper permits are now approaching her reluctantly, looking for help securing rights to use water from streams running through their property. While Hall sees plenty of problems with the current system, she says getting the appropriate water diversion permits is important. “By community members becoming legally compliant with our water diversion, they’re really helping to protect our water resources. ... It’s important that we all pay attention and engage in our water rights right now because everywhere we look, people are coming with their straws looking to take them away.”

At the July 2 meeting,

Huffman heard plenty of impassioned pleas for additional funding and resources and a host of examples as to why the current state of marijuana prohibition is untenable. As Downey said, “This Band Aid approach isn’t working.” While the congressman said repeatedly that he empathized with the situation those in the room were facing, he also made clear he had no “silver bullet” solutions. Ultimately, he said, national legalization or decriminalization of marijuana is the only answer and that remains years away. When it comes to the situation in the hills this summer, there’s little aid on the horizon.

The congressman and others pointed to some additional funding allocated by Gov. Jerry Brown to help the Water Board and Fish and Wildlife go after illegal diverters. Others mentioned Senate Bill 861, which gives Fish and Wildlife the power to issue civil diversion penalties administratively, rather than through the court system, the hope being that swift, decisive penalties might curtail some of the illegal diversions. But, in reality, the wheels of this growing season are set in motion and it appears there is little to slow them down. It’s unlikely that torrential downpours will show up to increase flows on the Van Duzen River, which was flowing at just 11 cubic feet per second on July 7 — well below the historic low of 16 cubic feet per second recorded in 1977 — or on any of the region’s other rivers, all of which are flowing well below normal, according to the USGS.

Bauer said it’s also important to remember that this collision course between Humboldt County’s green rush and the drought is playing out at a time when local salmon populations appear on the rise, rebounding after years and millions of dollars of restoration efforts. Bauer said his department was beginning to see results from years spent decommissioning old logging roads to keep sediment out of watersheds and improving salmon spawning habitats. “We’re doing our best to restore things, but without water there’s no fish,” Bauer said, predicting creeks that have never dried before will dry up this summer.

Coho salmon have a three-year life cycle, Bauer said, meaning that population impacts aren’t felt for several years. That lag time, Bauer said, makes it very difficult to ascertain what damage is being done before it’s too late: before spawning streams are gone, fish populations drop to the point where “you have brothers and sisters mating” and a whole species is thrown off course.

“That’s the thing that keeps me up at night,” Bauer said. “At what point do we reach that critical mass? At what point do we reach the point of no return?”

Enviro groups push Forest Service to release pot maps

By Grant Scott-Goforth

While there's little debate that marijuana grows on public land are hazardous to the public and the environment, there is some strife between environmental groups and the agencies that are charged with monitoring those lands.

At the heart of that dispute is just how much the U.S. Forest Service knows about "trespass grows," and whether the service and its co-agencies are doing enough with that information.

For years there have been rumors in environmentalist circles about maps. The Forest Service, they say, knows the location and size of every trespass marijuana grow on public forest land, but won't share that information. This perturbs the environmental groups that want a better grasp on the scale of the growing operations on public lands and want to hold the Forest Service accountable in several ways.

But specifics about these maps — how detailed they are, who has access to them, if they even exist — are murky.

Ryan Henson, policy director of the Redding-based California Wilderness Coalition, believes certain employees of the Forest Service have maps detailing the location and size of trespass grows. That's information his organization wants in order to get an idea of the impacts that grows could be having on wildlands. "We have tried to quantify that by getting maps of the locations of the grows," he said. "Frankly, the agencies have been reluctant to share those with us. I think they've been reluctant to share those with anyone."

Scott Greacen, director of Friends of the Eel River, echoed Henson's belief. "From extremely reliable sources, the Forest Service knows where the old grows are," he said. "We also know they have refused to share that info with environmental groups repeatedly."

The Journal asked the Forest Service for maps of trespass grows through a Freedom of Information Act request, but the request was denied. "Based on the knowledge of subject matter experts, we do not have any maps or lists that would respond to your request," the agency wrote.

There could be several plausible reasons the Forest Service didn't produce the rumored maps: They aren't official, they're part of ongoing law enforcement investigations or they don't exist. Or it could be that the maps — like the one Henson says he caught a brief glimpse of when it was offered by a Forest Service employee — are simply anecdotal information shared among staff members doing field work and then penciled onto the creased maps they carry in their back pockets.

Greacen suspects the Forest Service would simply rather the public not know how much it knows — or how little he says the agency does to prevent the grows. "The most obvious answer to me is they're embarrassed," he said. "They have failed in way too many instances to begin to address these legacy impacts."

Those impacts were the reason that the Environmental Protection Information Center initially petitioned the Forest Service for maps in 2011. In a letter to the agency, then EPIC Conservation Director Andrew Orahoske requested that the Forest Service "immediately initiate analysis of the impacts of marijuana cultivation on the Mendocino National Forest." It's the service's responsibility, EPIC argued, to "gather and evaluate new information relevant to the environmental impact of its actions" under the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA).

EPIC was asking the service to include the impacts of marijuana growing into its forest management plan, in that case, specifically as it applied to the Mendocino National Forest.

In response, then-acting Forest Supervisor Lee D. Johnson wrote, "Cannabis cultivation on federal lands is a criminal activity, not a federal action, and therefore NEPA does not apply." Instead of looking at the broad, cumulative effect of marijuana growing on public land, Johnson continued, the Forest Service would address cleanup on a site-by-site basis.

A year later, Orahoske broadened his request to the entire Pacific Southwest region managed by the Forest Service, but again received word, in 2013, that the Forest Service felt it wasn't required to perform environmental analysis on "illegal activity undertaken by third parties and not authorized, funded or carried out by the Forest Service."

The best way to minimize impacts, the letter said, was to discourage criminal activity "through aggressive law enforcement."

That statement reflects a potential divide between the two main tenets of the Forest Service: land management and law enforcement. EPIC Executive Director Natalynne DeLapp fears there is a lack of communication between the entities, meaning biologists, foresters and other land managers may be in the dark about the scale and impacts of grows. The group hasn't pushed the Forest Service since Orahoske left EPIC, but DeLapp said it's something the organization hopes to continue once it hires a new attorney.

Despite the Forest Service's denial of maps in the FOIA request, Tommy Lanier, a former special agent for the Forest Service and National Marijuana Initiative director, said a conglomerate of law enforcement agencies has detailed information on historical and contemporary marijuana grows on public lands. "They do have maps," he said. "We've got great technology nowadays. It goes into an intelligence database."

As the director of the National Marijuana Initiative, Lanier's job was to bring together a group of public land and law enforcement agencies that includes the Bureau of Land Management, the Forest Service, the U.S. Department of Justice and the National Guard. About 10 years ago, when the groups started to notice the environmental degradation from trespass grows, the initiative began to include academia, seeking scientific and university research that would analyze those impacts.

"Those public land agencies ... they've got every grow pinpointed on a map," Lanier said, but it's not that they're hiding them from the public. It's that the law enforcement side has gotten more sophisticated in its approach, seeking not just to bust grows, but to trace the distribution routes of the marijuana. This can take years, he said, and solid prosecution is key to keeping grows from proliferating. Just handing out details of where grows are would "jeopardize the larger cases they have going on," he said.

The maps also help the National Guard seek out old grow sites to clean up, Lanier said. "It's about $25,000 to $35,000 to set up a good grow. If [growers] can use that grow over and over, they will. One thing that's a great market disruption is taking everything out. Do they want to invest that money and time knowing that we know ... there was a grow there?"

Another disruption, environmental groups claim, would be the removal of old forest roads, which they believe make it easier for growers to set up marijuana gardens in the wilderness.

Greacen said old roads facilitate all kinds of illegal activity on public lands.

IN PART BECAUSE LARGE-SCALE MARIJUANA GROWS OFTEN USE ILLEGAL WATER DIVERSIONS (RIGHT) AND HEAVY INFRASTRUCTURE (BELOW), ENVIRONMENTAL GROUPS ARE PUSHING THE U.S. FOREST SERVICE TO RELEASE MAPS DETAILING THE LOCATIONS OF KNOWN GROW OPERATIONS ON PUBLIC LANDS. PHOTOS COURTESY OF THE CALIFORNIA DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND WILDLIFE

"When you keep unnecessary, failing roads open deep into wild country, logging almost inevitably follows," he said. But because of pressure from advocates for road access, Greacen said, little is done to deconstruct those roads. "From our perspective it's been clear the Forest Service wants to keep open many more miles of roads than it has money to maintain, or should maintain."

Henson said roads — even in protected wilderness areas — are important resources for the public who want to recreate. "I absolutely believe in road access," he said. But geographical analysis of grow sites could help show if, and how, roads are used by trespass growers.

"The one time someone did flash me a map it was very clear that the grow sites were clustered around the road network," Henson said. Though, he added, that could be survey bias — meaning perhaps the Forest Service is simply more likely to discover the grows located closer to roads. Still, he said, it's a problem, particularly in the Shasta-Trinity National Forest, where he said 5,000 miles of old, unused roads were never effectively closed. "Those roads to nowhere really are an invitation to illegal grows."

The same happens in Mendocino County, Henson said. "Blands Cove Road near Covelo — it seems to lead every year to growing in exactly the same place. I've long urged the Forest Service to more closely monitor the road or just close the road because it's just an attractive nuisance."

"Whiskeytown National Recreation Area [maintained by the National Park Service] closed all of their roads north of [State Route] 299 because they felt that would significantly cut down on illegal pot grow. And it did. The Forest Service needs to look at that just like the Park Service did."

Lanier said he doesn't see public road access as a double-edged sword, "I look at it as the bad guys taking advantage of the remoteness. ... We're going to get people who take advantage like that. Whether it's illegal mining practices or to grow marijuana."

Public land agencies have come a long way in their own education and informing the public since decades ago, Lanier said, when the first concerns about trespass growing arose. "Nobody ever wanted to actually come out and say, 'We should really tell the public there are a lot of dope growers on public lands with guns.' It was a hard sell."

But they're coming around. "It's upon us to inform and educate everybody," Lanier said, and "we need to continue to encourage people to use public lands."

Knowing trespass grows are a problem in his district, North Coast Congressman Jared Huffman introduced the Protecting Lands Against Narcotics Trafficking (PLANT) Act last summer, intending to establish new, harsher penalties for people caught causing environmental damage while growing marijuana on state or federal lands. At a recent meeting with local law enforcement, Huffman said the U.S. Sentencing Committee has taken up the charge on its own and new sentencing guidelines should be in place by September.

"I hope this is a nice, new tool for law enforcement to go after these trespass growers," he said, adding that the stiffer penalties could incentivize prosecutors to take on these types of cases while dissuading growers from engaging in the practice. However, Huffman said he realizes increased penalties will only go so far in addressing the pervasive problem.

"I don't pretend these new sentencing guidelines will be the silver bullet," he said. National decriminalization or legalization of marijuana, Huffman continued, is the only thing that will halt trespass grows.

Until then, most believe grows are likely to continue to pock public lands for the foreseeable future. For his part, Greacen said trespass grows are a matter of national security, and urges the Forest Service to release all the information it has about grows to the public. Until that information is released, he said, important questions will remain unanswered.

"What areas critical to wildlife and to fish have been impacted?" he asked "Collectively, how has the agency been mitigating those impacts — or have they?"

Vixen Kitchen Premium Vegan Gelato is a labor of love inspired by my two girls Gigi and Lola. Like most kids, they love sweets. The problem came when I went to read the labels of some of their favorite treats. They were filled with junk created in a chemistry lab instead of a kitchen. So I created this gourmet vegan gelato that I'm confident will satisfy their cravings and my high standards — It's both delicious and nutritious. It can be enjoyed daily without guilt and its 100 percent organic! The best part is it's filled with simple wholesome ingredients even a six-year-old can pronounce. I have created a dessert that tastes amazing, but has the nutritional profile of a super food: densely loaded with minerals, vitamins and healthy fats. Try it for yourself and be amazed!

STAGE MATTERS

CHRISTINA JIORAS, NADIA ADAME AND RAYMOND WALDO IN A CHEKHOV-FLAVORED COMEDY.

Trouble in Chekhovania

Durang's hit comedy at Redwood Curtain

By William S. Kowinski

stagematters@northcoastjournal.com

Imagine — as playwright Christopher Durang did — that two American parents who are also college professors name their three children after characters in famous plays by Anton Chekhov. The result is the 2012 comedy Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike, now on stage at Redwood Curtain in Eureka.

Additional inspiration came when Durang noticed that his home in the eastern Pennsylvania countryside resembled the bucolic settings of several Chekhov plays in which aging characters express regrets for wasted lives. Durang, whose first stage hit was Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All For You in 1981, was himself entering his 60s.

Durang has written parodies and farces (including an unproduced screenplay with my favorite of his titles: The Nun Who Shot Liberty Valance.) This is different. It riffs on Chekhov but also stands alone as a contemporary take on perennial themes of regret and hope, disappointment and new beginnings in Durang's uniquely off-center comic voice.

Chekhov thought of his plays as comedies, but he usually neglected to include a happy ending. Durang doesn't make that mistake. In 2013 Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike became Durang's first Tony Award winner.

The play opens with Vanya and his adopted sister Sonia, both in their 50s, watching for the blue heron that visits the pond outside their farm house in a Philadelphia suburb on a late summer morning. They've spent 15 years taking care of their dying parents, and fear their own lives are over.

Their stasis is stirred first by their prophetic housekeeper Cassandra, whose every sentence seems to begin with "Beware!" Their sister Masha arrives — she is a rich and famous Hollywood actress (Sexy Killer, Sexy Killer 2) — accompanied by Spike, her much younger aspiring actor boyfriend (a finalist for a role in the reality series Entourage 2).

Masha organizes them all to attend a costume party (she'll be Snow White, her siblings will be the dwarfs), and incidentally has decided to sell the house. She's been paying the mortgage (and to support her siblings), but she's aging, too, and her career isn't what it was.

Meanwhile Spike finds Nina, an even younger aspiring actor visiting nearby relatives. She is thrilled to meet the immediately jealous Masha and decides to call Vanya uncle. Though several offstage characters are important catalysts for what ensues, the focus is on these six as they deal with the consequences of the past, the illusions of the present and the possibilities of the future.

The Redwood Curtain production is superbly cast. Though there are elements of caricature, these characters become individuals with their own minds and emotions, so the actors are required to inhabit and express their individuality.

Gloria Montgomery confidently navigates Masha's alternating flashes of ego and affection, anxiety and awareness. She also credibly works towards a sudden moment of emotional practicality.

Christina Jioras creates a believable and sympathetic Sonia as she breaks out of her gloom and doubts and yet can't believe her luck. Nadia Adame brings a sharp comic energy to the household as the psychic Cassandra, who mixes the exotic and the everyday with a feather duster that doubles as a ritual instrument and a surprisingly effective voodoo doll.

In their important supporting roles, Geo Alva plays Spike's casual narcissism with California flavor, while Mira Eagle embodies Nina's youthful spirit as she innocently discovers wonders of the past.

Masha drives the action and Sonia makes the most transformative move, but the soul of the story is Vanya. Raymond Waldo (who has played Chekhov's Uncle Vanya) performs brilliantly as this gentle man who misses the past and worries about the future. Vanya's angry, rambling monologue, accompanied by aimless wandering around the stage, seldom rises above cliché but still comically conveys his heartfelt fear of a dangerously thoughtless present.

Even with such strong characters, some of the best moments are interactions. Jioras and Montgomery perform an amazingly realistic crying scene that is simultaneously heartrending and hilarious. The last scene strains for a feel-good finish but gets there anyway. There are lots of laughs along the way. Durang is unpredictable and it often seems the play is being written before your eyes.

Director Jyl Hewston ensures her actors play the human nuances as well as the comic set pieces. Scenic and sound design are by Liz Uhazy, lighting by Telfer Reynolds and costumes by Jenneveve Hood. Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike is on stage at Redwood Curtain Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays through July 26. 443-7688, www.redwoodcurtain.com.

Coming Up: This weekend at the Mad River Festival, clown Mooky Cornish presents The Glories of Gloria Revue. Cornish plays an aging performer reviewing her career in a revue that includes puppetry, cabaret song, dancing and magic. Created by Cornish and director Cal McCrystal, it's in the Carlo Theatre Thursday, July 10 through Saturday, July 12 at 8 p.m., with afternoon shows on Saturday at 2 p.m. and Sunday at 4 p.m. 668-5663, www.dellarte.com. ●

JOYCE JONTÉ'S WATERCOLOR "FRAGILE."

In the Flesh

Joyce Jonté at Arcata Artisans

By Ken Weiderman

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

She's framed by an angled heel on the left and a blaze of ruby curls on the right. Lying back, her bare chest rises into a field of deep slate blue. One hand rests on her ribcage, winding a tawny shadow toward her lavender underwear. Ochre tones trail from beneath her penciled form as ruddy brush strokes define the curves of her body. "Fragile," one of Joyce Jonté's distinctive figurative watercolors, flows seamlessly across the paper.

Jonté, July's featured artist at Arcata Artisans, has built a life around her love for drawing and painting figures. On a rainy afternoon, Jonté is dressed in black with a striped scarf loose around her neck. Silver curls fall across her shoulder, but her bangs are trimmed neatly above her glasses. As children, Jonté and her five sisters would make things for hours at a round table in the kitchen near a cupboard stuffed with paper dolls and art supplies. On summer backpacking trips when most kids would be fishing or digging for bugs, she would curl up next to a mountain stream and paint wildflowers. "When I was 14," Jonté says, "I decided I was going to be an artist and never looked back."

In high school, her teacher arranged a working scholarship for her to teach younger students how to paint in exchange for weekly adult life-drawing classes. "Every chance I got to figure draw, I was doing it," she says. Graduating in three years, Jonté traveled to Humboldt with the boyfriend her parents disapproved of (they're still together) and attended HSU, eventually earning her art degree and becoming an integral part of the arts community.

Now firmly rooted, Jonté has created a life that revolves around artistic activity. Laughing, she admits that she should get out more, go see art shows, travel to big city museums and rub elbows at local art openings. "I'm a little selfish about making art," she says bashfully. "I just want to paint all the time!" Running or attending at least four figure drawing sessions each week, as well as frequent workshops and classes, allows her to work the way she likes to work best: from life.

While many painters create work from their imaginations or rely on photos for inspiration, Jonté prefers to sit with live subjects, be they flowers or people. There's an intimacy and immediacy to the process, a connection that she feels transfers into her work. "If I have to look at a photo, it's like they're farther away," she says. Painting directly from live models de-

"ICELANDIC POPPIES,"

MOVEMENT OF JONTÉ'S
HUMAN SUBJECTS.

JOYCE JONTÉ

mands timeliness; flowers wilt and models can only pose for so long. Work from these sessions contains an energy that comes from giving up a certain amount of control over the process. A breeze blows the flower or the model moves, but, as Jonté says, "it's more beautiful when there's a give and take" to the process.

To illustrate her point, Jonté fetches a still-wet watercolor painting of strawberries from her studio desk. In the image, a bowl overflows with ripe red fruit, which are given life through gestural strokes and loose, fluid color. The vibrant red hues overlap to create the forms without outlines or precise details. She points to a strawberry next to the bowl, noting how much stiffer it is than the rest. "I was working from a photo to add this one in," she says. The difference is striking — whereas the original berries are nearly abstract, the new berry is stiff and tight, each seed singularly defined against red flesh.

Jonté's embrace of figures and flowers is quite natural. After all, flowers, too, are living, curvy, colorful, individual and full of life. There's also a practical side. Even in our enlightened contemporary culture, nude paintings can be difficult to exhibit. "I've had times when I've loaded my whole car with paintings and been told I can't show them there," says Jonté. Our American puritanical residue continues to link nudity with sex, she laments, adding, "It's sad that there are businesses where people will quit buying coffee if there is a nipple in a painting." Still, she pushes forward undeterred, simply because she loves creating art and the community her art creates. For Jonté, art isn't meant to be confined to a studio. It's a social process connecting artists with each other and radiating out into the larger world.

Models work hard and don't come cheap, so local life drawers join forces and create groups where many people can draw and paint at once. Jonté, a group leader, enjoys the social nature of these sessions — people coming together and learning from one another. One of Jonté's favorite workshops is with teens from Arcata High School's Arts Institute. Through a grant from the Carl Nielsen Memorial Fund and Arcata Rotary, Jonté says she is "giving back the gift that was given to me." ●

Moqueca Saborosa ...

Means tasty
Brazilian seafood stew

By Maria Vanderhorst

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

It was our second evening in Salvador, Bahia, on the coast of Brazil. My husband and I came to Brazil to soak up the music, dance and beaches of Rio de Janeiro and Salvador, but the country also has a rich culinary heritage with dishes influenced by Portuguese, African and indigenous cooking. We had already filled up on churrasco (Brazilian barbecue) and feijoada (black bean stew with pork and cured beef) plus dozens of coxinhas (crispy fried fritters filled with chicken or hearts of palm), so we went in search of a restaurant described in a local magazine as having authentic Bahian food. As we approached, I noticed the adjacent door, which opened up to a staircase, was getting all the foot traffic. Downstairs was a smattering of diners eating more pots of black bean stew. Confused, hungry and deflated, I fumbled to respond to the hostess. She smiled, grabbed a couple of menus and was about to seat us, when she suddenly stopped and told us to try the place upstairs if we wanted real Bahian food. I said, “Obrigada!” and ran up the stairs.

On the second floor was a por kilo restaurant where you paid by weight — perfect for curious, hungry visitors — with fried plantains, sautéed collards, grilled fish and garlic rice on the buffet. Amid the bounty, I noticed an aromatic stew with bits of cilantro and red bell peppers. The cashier encouraged me to try it with a sprinkle of farofa, (toasted, seasoned manioc flour) and spicy pepper sauce on top. The dish was called moqueca, a Bahian specialty with coconut milk, fish and prawns. I spooned the moqueca onto some rice and we sat down for our meal just as the sound of the evening’s bloco afro percussion shows began in the distance. The harmonious blend of salty caramelized onions, sweet red bell peppers and coconut milk, fresh seafood, earthy palm oil and vibrant cilantro was unforgettable. The stew was velvety yet had a lightness that allowed me to eat forkful after forkful. It paired wonderfully with my cold Skol beer. I went for a second plate of moqueca despite my husband’s head-shaking. He knew that my full stomach meant staying out until 4 a.m. to dance my dinner off for a third night in a row. As I paid, the cashier gave me a huge smile and thumbs up. I gave him a thumbs up back for recommending what continues to be my favorite Brazilian dish.

Moqueca

The following recipe comes from watching a Brazilian street vendor make moqueca and an adaptation of a recipe from Brazil, A Cook’s Tour, by Christopher Idone. In Brazil, the stew is made in a black clay pot, but I’ve found that a deep cast-iron skillet or Dutch oven works well. Dende oil or palm oil can be hard to find locally, so annatto oil is a great substitute. You’ll have to go online or out of town for farofa. Serves 8.

Ingredients and method:

2 pounds firm whitefish (i.e. halibut, sea bass), cut into 8 steaks, approximately 4 ounces each
2 pounds shelled prawns
¼ cup olive oil
2 medium onions, sliced thinly
½ cup tomato sauce
4 medium diced tomatoes

2 red bell peppers, sliced thinly
4 cups coconut milk
½ bunch of cilantro
½ cup water
Salt and pepper to taste
Dende oil or annatto oil* for drizzling

Preheat the oven to 375 F. Season the fish and shrimp with salt and pepper. In a sauté pan, heat the olive oil over a medium-high burner. Add the onions and sauté them until translucent. Add the tomato sauce and cook it for another minute. Add the chopped tomatoes and red bell peppers. Stir the mixture and cook it for another 5-8 minutes until it thickens. Stir in the coconut milk and water. Place the fish in a lightly oiled, deep cast-iron skillet or glass baking dish. Pour the sauce over the fish and cover it with a lid or aluminum foil. Bake the fish for 10 minutes. After removing it from the oven, place cilantro sprigs over the fish, replace the cover, and bake it for an additional 5 minutes. Add the prawns, placing them in the sauce throughout the pan, and put it back in the oven for an additional 5-7 minutes until all the seafood is cooked. Serve over white rice with a sprinkle of farofa.

*Annatto Oil: Annatto seeds are readily available in most Mexican food markets. Warm 1 cup of vegetable oil in a heavy-bottomed saucepan over medium-low heat. Add ½ cup of annatto seeds and reduce the heat to low. Stir constantly for 3-5 minutes until the oil is reddish orange. Remove the pan from heat and let it cool. Strain the oil into a glass jar with a tight fitting lid. Keep the oil refrigerated for up to two days. ●

Due Dates

Humboldt is poised to deliver

By Jennifer Savage

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Somehow what should have been a lackadaisical post-holiday week turns out to have a number of potentially damn fine shows. Of special note, the joy that is the Humboldt Folklife Festival starts this Saturday with the Pilot Rock Ramblers and Clean Livin' at the Mad River Brewery at 6 p.m. Other highlights include Monday's Songwriter Night featuring Mo and Morgan, Lemon Lemon Cherry and Joanne Rand in the Big Hammer Tent and Lyndsey Battle at the Logger Bar. Both shows start at 7:30 p.m. and cost $5. You've also got your Jazz Night, your Old-Timey Night, your Outlaw Country night and more. See the Journal calendar for further details.

Now, let's break our usual chronological format to highlight a particularly happy event.

Saturday: Labor of love

Here are things Tacocat, Ponytime and Chastity Belt have in common: Seattle, a certain danceability to their various forms of pop/punk/rock, and members in the "supergroup" band Childbirth. Julia Shapiro (guitar, vocals), Bree McKenna (bass, vocals) and Stacy Peck (drums) are clearly having fun, but dead serious about kicking ass, lyrically and musically. Favorite tracks include "Crossbitch" ("She'll fuck you in the eye with a needle"), "How Do Girls Even Do It?" (addictively riffy riff on how confusing lesbian sex is to the confused) and "I Only Fucked You as a Joke" (self-explanatory). The wonders of Childbirth happen at the Lil' Red, along with Colorado's Lisa Prank, who offers "makeout pop music influenced by heartbreak, stickers, psychedelic kittens, tarot cards, and dolphins leaping over rainbows!" Rounding out the bill is Eureka's own The Lost Luvs. The show is only $4, 21-and-over and starts at 9 p.m.

The rest of this week/end's recommendations, in order:

Friday: Face-melting

Fourth of July fireworks a distant memory? Do you need more explosions? No worries! A-town will literally (literally!) blow up when the experimental sludge ferocity of Tacoma's Lozen and punk-noise brilliance of Los Angeles' Qui (who boasted The Jesus Lizard's David Yow as a band mate for a time and still work with him when schedules permit, according to the band's Facebook page) land at the Jambalaya. Joining these two duos, local sweetheart garage rockers, Clean Girl & The Dirty Dishes. Cover is $5, show is 21-and-over, doors open at 9 p.m., things ignite around 10 p.m. (Note: Last week's Setlist incorrectly listed this show as being at the Alibi — it's at the Jambalaya. We regret the error.)

Friday/Saturday: Love them two times

Up in Trinidad, L.A.'s bluesy rockers Hunter & The Dirty Jacks celebrate the Humboldt release of latest album Single Barrel with not one, but two nights at Cher-Ae Heights. The band's bio cites influences The Rolling Stones and the Black Crowes and a quick listen confirms both the underlying raunchy blues hooks and emphasis on rock 'n' roll. Free show, 21-and-over, 9 p.m.

Saturday: Punk! Junk!

Things get loud at the Alibi once again with Portland punk rock 'n' rollers P.R.O.B.L.E.M.S. and Fortucky junk rockers The Real DT's. You may attend this show if you have an ID confirming you are at least 21 years of age. The folks who run these things will expect you to ante up the $5 cover around 10 p.m. and the ear-blistering begins 11-ish.

Saturday: You will dance

Did you get your tickets yet, fans of the gypsy-jazz? The ever exuberant Di-ego's Umbrella heats up Humboldt Brews once again, beginning at 9:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 and really, just get them ahead of time — people love these guys! Show is 21-and-over.

Whoa! The prodigal son returns

Possibly Blue Lake's most missed musician — frontman for the town's beloved circa-mid-2000s The Rubbernecks, yes, we're talking about the one, the only, Clay Smith — comes home to the Mad River for one night of music and mayhem at the Logger Bar, Saturday, July 19, coincidentally the final day of the Folklife Fest. If you're too new to town to remember Smith, think of your wildest, most whiskey-drenched cowpunk cousins and that'll give you a clue as to the powerful flavor of The Rubbernecks' music. We anticipate he'll bring back old favorites and will know more about his new stuff next week. Blue Lake is a family and this will be one hell of a reunion, folks. Don't miss it.

It's easy to forget how beautifully situated Loleta is, tucked away in the Eel River Valley, nestled betwixt the south bay, the Eel River and the Pacific. Take a closer look at the landscape around the bucolic burg by bike or on foot during the Tour of Loleta on Sunday, July 13. There are several courses, from a family friendly, flat 8-mile ride all the way to a 107-mile ride. You can register the morning of the event starting at 6:30, but you might want to register early on Friday, July 11 from 5 to 7 p.m. at Loleta Elementary School.

With any number of miles under your belt, you're gonna work up a mighty appetite. The Loleta Chamber of Commerce wants you to replace that grumbling in the pit of your stomach with something from the grill pit. Swauger Station Days is a celebration of Loleta's geography and railway history that comes with barbecue ($12, $6 kids under 10). Park your bike and head to the Loleta Firemen's Pavilion and Tom Carr Park to gorge on roasted meat, enjoy some live music and take a ride on a speeder car courtesy of the Timber Heritage Association.

Rail Time

There was a time when Humboldt was abustle with rails and choo-choos. Sure, now we have freeways and you can even fly in and out of Arcata (sometimes ... OK, occasionally), but it's important to remember where our towns and cities came from. We still have our ports, but the echoing chugs and whistles are long gone. You could head down to the library and read all the books they have on Humboldt's rail history (seriously, there are tons), but Blue Lake would rather you added some whimsy. Annie and Mary Day is a tribute to all things rail, with some parades, baseball and barbecue added into the mix (free entry, food prices vary). On Sunday, July 13, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Perigot Park comes alive with community-centered fun and games.

The parade starts at 11 a.m. for spectators, but get there at 10 a.m. if you'd like to join the formation (no marching band or baton skills necessary). You don't want to pass up this chance to march alongside the theatrically spectacular members of Dell'Arte. From noon until 5 p.m. the cooks start pulling the meat off the grill and food is on! Enjoy your meal while you listen to music from The Timber Ridge Boys, The Bayou Swamis, Kingfoot and others. If you're not tuckered out from the parading, eating and dancing, then head to the after party at the Logger Bar at 8 p.m. to see a performance by the Living Rooms. It could be a long day, but good things rarely happen quickly.

North and South

This could go two ways. Pack up your banjo and head north to Blue Lake for the Humboldt Folklife Festival, or mozy south for Fortuna Rodeo Week. Wait, what kind of mileage do you get? Maybe you can hit both.

The pickin' and fiddlin' in Blue Lake starts with a Kickoff on Saturday, July 12 at 6 p.m. at the Mad River Brewery with Clean Livin' and the Pilot Rock Ramblers. There's more music at Annie and Mary Day on Sunday (see page 39), rolling right into a week of genre shows in Dell'Arte's tent. Songwriter Night features Mo Morgan, Lemon Lemon Cherry and Joanne Rand on Monday, July 14 at 7:30 p.m. ($7, $5), and Jazz Night with Sound Judgement, La Musique Diabolique and RLA Trio is on Tuesday, July 15 at 7:30 p.m. ($7, $5). Old-Timey Night with Raising Grain, No Good Redwood Ramblers and Huckleberry Flint starts at 6 p.m. Wednesday, July 16 ($10, $8), and the rowdy Outlaw Country Night whoops it up with Gunsafe, Rooster McClintock and Cliff Dallas and the Death Valley Troubadours on Thursday, July 17 at 6 p.m. ($10, $8).

If your brand of country includes actual brands, turn your boots toward Fortuna's Main Street for the chili cookoff at 5 p.m. on Monday, July 14 (free). You might oughta drink some milk first. Little cowboys and cowgirls can dress up and ride ponies during the children's games on Tuesday, July 15 at 6 p.m. and the street games, like the stick horse races and dummy roping on Wednesday, July 16 at 6 p.m. (free). The carnival lights come on Wednesday at noon and stay on through Sunday ($25 all-day wristbands). Thursday, July 17 brings Junior Rodeo starting at 9 a.m. at Rohner Park ($3, $1 kids 6-12) and buckets of fun at the Firemen's Games back on Main Street at 6:30 p.m. (free).

Flip a coin — it'll be a good time either way.

Reviews

THEY CAME TOGETHER. This, the latest from The State alums David Wain, Michael Showalter, et al., isn't playing here. It has only had a small theatrical opening in major cities, but, thanks to the dubious miracle of modern technology, They Came Together is concurrently available to stream on-demand from a variety of outlets. It seems like cheating, I know, but if a Luddite like me can figure out how to do it, it's fair game. Even if I couldn't manage it on my own, I would coerce a loved one, because everything these guys touch is made golden.

Paul Rudd and Amy Poehler play Joel and Molly, who, over the course of a double date with Kyle and Karen (the often painfully funny Bill Hader and Ellie Kemper), recount the charming tale of their romance. The setup is a little clumsy, but that's because writers Showalter and Wain (the latter also directs) use every cliché of the romantic comedy genre against itself. The dinner table recounting of a meet-cute turns into the most effective skewering of rom-com tropes in recollection. Molly owns a too-precious, little candy shop, staffed by her token black friend. The store is falling into the shadow of the monolithic Corporate Candy Company. Guess where Joel works?

The plot, as it were, is little more than a sketch, and that's all it needs to be. It creates an environment where the leads (and a collection of fractured-archetype supporting characters) can fall down stairs, call each other unspeakable names and do all the other things that make Wain movies what they are. This one isn't quite as on-point hilarious as Wet Hot American Summer (2001), but what is? It does, however, manage to retain some of the earnest sweetness of Role Models (2008), alloy it with the genuine absurdity of The Ten (2007) and create something simultaneously predictable, surprising and frequently laugh-out-loud funny. R. 83m.

DELIVER US FROM EVIL. The antithesis of something as easily enjoyed as They Came Together is self-important dreck like this. Where the former makes good fun of lampooning genre, the latter clings to conventions with misplaced fervor and is no fun at all. James Wan's work notwithstanding, no other genre has so consistently failed to live up to my already sub-basement level expectations like possession/exorcism movies. And guess what? This is no exception.

Supposedly what we're subjected to is based on actual events, which I can only hope is true. Absent that tiny glimmer of authenticity, we are left only with yet another beyond-derivative version of the same old thing. William Friedkin told this same story exceptionally well with The Exorcist (1973), and nobody has really added anything to the conversation since. Maybe it's time to hang it up.

Eric Bana, who I like as a leading man, plays NYPD Sergeant Ralph Sarchie. Complete with bogus Bronx accent and needlessly wisecracking partner (Joel McHale), he takes on the worst the city has to offer. When a series of unexplainable, interrelated events threaten Sarchie's sanity and family, he turns reluctantly to Catholic priest/exorcism bad-boy Father Mendoza (Edgar Ramirez). Things go exactly as one might expect.

There are moments within Deliver Us From Evil that are genuinely scary, but they are too few, too far between and too disjointed to sustain any sort of tension. The movie can't settle on a tone, or even a point of view, and it never delivers. It's not dark enough for real horror fans, probably too dark for anybody looking to just pass the time and generally too self-serious to be any fun at all. R. 118m.

OBVIOUS CHILD. I was pleasantly surprised to see this in a local theater. Sure, it's being promoted aggressively on a variety of social media platforms and starting to get traction nationally. But it's an indie about a female standup comic having an abortion after a one-night stand — hardly the stuff of box office gold, especially for our local theater operation. (Lest we forget, this is the same company that in 2012 opened Dinesh D'Souza's birther screed 2016: Obama's America in the biggest auditorium at the Broadway multiplex. But I should just hold my tongue and be thankful.) Star Jenny Slate has generated a lot of buzz for her lead performance here, and with good reason. She'll have to share some of the credit with writer-director Gillian Robespierre (and a few other contributing scribes), but she deserves praise and then some for her portrayal of troubled Donna Stern.

Within days, Donna finds herself without a relationship or a day job. Her relationship with her mother is strained, her boyfriend has taken up with one of her close friends and she's so depressed she can't even turn it into usable jokes. In the midst of this morass happens handsome, affable Max (Jake Lacy). After their drunken tryst, Donna discovers she's pregnant, decides to have an abortion and can't figure out what to do with Max.

Obvious Child works remarkably well on a number of levels. It neatly sidesteps the treacly nonsense of most rom-coms (see above), while still servicing the real-life actions and emotions from which other dumber movies are drawn. In addition, it takes on the meaning of abortion in a woman's life in a more even-handed, realistic way than I've seen in cinema. And it is frequently hilarious, which doesn't hurt. R. 84m.

Previews

DAWN OF THE PLANET OF THE APES. Chimps on horseback — that's just wrong. Can Gary Oldman's scrappy band of survivors save humanity from winding up the losers of evolution? PG13. 130m.

Continuing

22 JUMP STREET. It ain't broke, and they ain't fixing it. Jonah Hill and Channing Tatum return as undercover cops busting a college drug ring in this funny and self-aware comedy. R. 112m.

CHEF. Jon Favreau stars in this well done food-truck road movie that cuts through professional kitchen bravado to real humanity and warmth. With Robert Downey Jr. and John Leguizamo. Bring napkins. R. 115m.

EARTH TO ECHO. A group of youngsters find a friendly alien and help him phone, ahem, sorry, get home. PG. 89m.

EDGE OF TOMORROW. Tom Cruise and Emily Blunt as soldiers battling aliens in a post-apocalyptic Groundhog Day loop. Clever, slick and utterly forgettable. PG13. 113m.

THE FAULT IN OUR STARS. Beat the rush and start crying now. Adapted from John Green's novel with excellent performances from Shailene Woodley and Ansel Elgort as the young, star-crossed lovers. PG13. 126m.

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON 2. Transportive animation and talented voice acting create a world worth revisiting and a story with humor and real drama. PG. 102m.

JERSEY BOYS. Clint Eastwood's adaptation of the Broadway musical about the Four Seasons has the music and the look, but the story is the same old predictable song. R. 134m.

MALEFICENT. An atmospheric, good-looking fantasy with a sharpened Angelina Jolie as the fairytale party crasher from Sleeping Beauty. Heavy on CGI, light on character and not quite scary enough. PG. 98m.

TAMMY. Melissa McCarthy plays a woman on a wild and wooly rock-bottom road trip with her hard-drinking grandmother, played by Susan Sarandon. R. 102m.

TRANSFORMERS: AGE OF EXTINCTION. Even game actors and fun cameos can't save the planet from the thin plot and epic running time of the latest Michael Bay disaster. He might have tried more dinosaurs. PG13. 165m.

FIELD NOTES

ANOTHER VERSION OF WHY SO MANY LANGUAGES AROSE, FROM THE BOOK OF GENESIS. SEEING THE UNCHECKED POWER OF HUMANS SPEAKING ONE TONGUE, GOD COMMANDED: "GO TO, LET US GO DOWN, AND THERE CONFOUND THEIR LANGUAGE, THAT THEY MAY NOT UNDERSTAND ONE ANOTHER'S SPEECH." THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, GUSTAVE DORÉ, 1865. PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Quest for the Mother Tongue: Part 2

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Last week, we considered the possibility of reconstructing Proto-World, the mother tongue from which all of the world's languages, living and dead, are derived. Although a handful of maverick researchers claim to have re-created a couple of dozen "ur-words" spoken by our ancestors more than 100,000 years ago, most linguists have dismissed their efforts. Given that languages (especially unwritten ones) change constantly and rapidly, mainstream researchers say it's impossible to retrace more than a few thousand years of language history.

American linguist John McWhorter, who has written extensively about Proto-World, uses as his go-to example of rapid language change the Cheyenne word aa for "winter." Around 1,500 years ago, speakers of Cheyenne's precursor language, Proto-Algonquian, were using peponwi for the cold season. Historical linguists have been able to show exactly how a well-documented series of sound changes (from the wi ending to eon, ain, ai, aii, aa and finally aa) morphed peponwi into aa. All this in 1,500 years. Yet the Proto-World reconstructionists claim to have derived words from nearly 100 times further back! Hence the rather cruel dismissal of their efforts by some mainstream researchers as "the cold fusion of linguistics."

Maybe we can't reconstruct any actual words in Proto-World, but not all is lost. We can make some reasonable deductions as to its general aspects by considering the closest we have to a "virgin language" today: creoles. A creole language starts out as a pidgin, that is, a highly simplified method of communication between two groups of people who lack a common language. When whites encountered Australian Aborigines in the late 1700s, for instance, both parties spoke a pidgin English for trading. For whites and Aborigines alike, this was a second language learned as adults.

When children hear a pidgin and start speaking it among themselves as their primary tongue (in a process known as "nativization") it becomes a creole, with at least some of the subtleties inherent in any natural language. While the vocabulary of a creole derives mostly from the pidgin's parent language(s), grammar and syntax arise spontaneously and naturally. The odd thing, though, is that, whatever the structure of their parent languages, creoles the world over have a great deal of grammar and syntax in common. Virtually all creoles: use subject-verb-object word order ("dog bit man"); are non-tonal (meaning pitch doesn't affect the meaning of words, unlike in most languages today); ignore definite and indefinite articles ("the" and "a"); do not differentiate between verbs and nouns (context supplying the meaning); and lack tenses ("She go yesterday"). Isn't this astonishing? When humans — in this case, children of pidgin-speakers — unconsciously decide on the syntax and structure of language, they choose the same universal forms.

According to many linguists (but not all — they tend to be a combative bunch), our Proto-World mother tongue likely had similar forms to those of first-generation creoles. We'll probably never know if our distant ancestors used tik for finger or aqwa for water or any other specific words. But by listening to speakers of creole today, we can get a sense of what those inventive first language speakers might have sounded like. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) ran out of space before getting into Noam Chomsky's "Universal Grammar."

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF DONALD GENE TUTTLE CASE NO. PR140168

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, DONALD GENE TUTTLE

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by LLOYD TUTTLE In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that LLOYD TUTTLE Be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 31, 2014 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept: 8.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.
